

MOZ THE DOG'S BLOG

'Tails from the Farm'

Well, as it's still raining more than it is dry and I have a severe case of trench paw (!), I decided it would be good to investigate the aforementioned 'Hungry Gap'. Grumpy finally agreed to take me along and as you can see it involves a quad bike and the spinner. I wasn't quite sure how we'd get sausages out of that but as a close friend of mine said, every day is a school day! After an hour of driving I decided my hungry gap could do with something to tide me over, so asked Grumpy for a sample what we were popping out for the birds.

I have never been so disappointed! Grumpy handed me something which resembled seeds...not a sausage in sight! I was rather hungry so thought I'd at least try it and honestly, worse than broccoli!
Never again.

Anyway, if you see seed and chips of corn on tracks around the estate it was me feeding the birds, it was so wet in the even fields we had to leave the feed on the tracks. Hopefully it will help as most of the wild food has gone now and probably won't return until April. Very pleased to say we've done our bit during this Hungry Gap!

